In his letter of invitation to the international community, Vice Chancellor Prof. Richard Barnett states:

"It is with pleasure that I invite the international community to the ICEE-2011 International Conference on Engineering Education to be hosted by the University of Ulster in Belfast, Northern Ireland. This will be the first time ever that the iNEER Network will assemble on the island of Ireland. Belfast is a city of great vibrancy - rich in culture, comprised of people full of warmth and hospitality, interesting history and lots of exciting things to do. You will find that Belfast has much to offer the profession, the individual and the family. With the enthusiastic support of Belfast City Council, coupled with an excellent range of professional services, please consider ICEE-2011 as the place for your next key presentation and as the place to network with people in the field of engineering education." Dr. James Uhomobhi, Conference Chair, indicates that ICEE-2011 will provide a richly diverse "think-tank" environment to promote the process of linking technology, engineering, education and sustainability for global development. He sees this conference as the coming together of participants with diverse backgrounds to provide further stimulus for our common goals in the area of engineering sustainability for worldwide development..." His letter of welcome is available at:
